A: As of version 2.4.2 of flac, it's been possible to use wavpack as a backend (not only as a backend in the sense of being the source of the original file). This is done in the frontend's settings. You just need to tick the box "use wavpack as a backend" in the output settings. In defiance of the Kurdistan Region Government, Canada and Turkey are refusing to formally withdraw as guarantors of the two capitals, prompting Kurdish officials to seek international help in enforcing the Iraqi constitution. Ever since the federal government announced last week that it planned to shutter the Syrian border, many Ottawa officials have been worried about what would happen to Canada's lucrative trade with Syria and its long-standing role as a guarantor of Kurdish territory. Most notably, last week's announcement also included a warning that the border closure would apply to trade, which means shutting down access to the hundreds of millions of dollars in business between Canada and Syrian businesses. What Canada and Turkey have always hoped would be a defining moment of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's policy toward Syria is unlikely to come to fruition. Expect to see more of Canada's "principled" foreign policy, Stephen Harper's former special representative for Iraq, James Loney told National Observer. "Things continue to deteriorate but they are not, at least not yet, the end of the world," Loney said. Loney believes the worst for Canada has passed and that things will get back to normal over the next few years. To back this up, he pointed to the controversial seizure of the Iraqi oil fields by the Turkish military in October 2016 as an example of how the world's greatest and most powerful military can still be defeated by a much smaller one. "If we didn't know by the end of the year it was going to end badly for Turkey [on the ground], at least in the short term, we now do. So, there is a bit of a game of whack-a-mole and the starting point is that we have seen the [Syrian Kurdish regional government] win some victorie
